

The four responsibilities of the learning professional

Foundation principles

When you're a professional, people seek you out for your expertise. They respect you for your knowledge and your experience. They rely on you to look after their interests and to put them right if they're heading in the wrong direction.

Unfortunately, you don't become a professional just by calling yourself one.

To be a true learning professional - on equal footing with doctors, engineers, accountants and lawyers - you need to recognise your responsibilities: to your clients, to the learners with which you interact, to your fellow professionals, and to yourself.

This short course acts as a foundation to the whole Skills Journey curriculum. It explains what it means to be a learning professional and why we need to be more professional than ever.

Is this for you?

This course is aimed at anyone with a professional role in learning and development. If you have direct responsibility for meeting the needs of internal or external clients and/or learners then that probably means you.

How it works

The course is comprised of five lessons, each of which includes a video and an activity to complete. These activities will be valuable in helping you build your skills and confidence. You will also be provided with a range of valuable resources that you can use for on-going reference, including a quick reference guide and an infographic.

If you complete the course, you will receive a Skills Journey badge.
